The water bottles were used in Nunavut's capital last fall when fuel contamination in the municipal water supply prevented approximately 8,000 Iqalumiut from drinking tap water for two months.

arriving in Iqaluit.

“We thought about what we could do to try and help alleviate some of the environmental impacts of what was happening,” he said. “Our intention was to try and reduce that impact and to help where we can.”

When the crisis began in October, Tattuinee said Nunavut Sealink helped fill four sea cans with used plastic bottles.

Brian Tattuinee, a business development manager with Nunavut Sealink, which is partly owned by Arctic Co-operatives Ltd., said the organization has partnered with five others — Qikiqtaaluk Environmental Inc., Nunavut Airport Services Ltd., Baffinland Iron Mines Corp., the Qikiqtani Inuit Association and the City of Iqaluit — to ship the bottles south on the first sealift ship

“Given the circumstances, I think everybody who could step up has stepped up and done what they can to try and help with the whole situation,” Tattuinee said.

According to Tattuinee, the plastic bottles will be transported to the Nunavut Sealink and Supply port in Sainte-Catherine, Que.

Last Oct. 12, the Government of Nunavut issued a do-not-consume water advisory in Iqaluit, forcing residents to buy bottled water from grocery stores, fill jugs at a station near the library supplied by water

The do-not-consume order was lifted Dec. 10.

The logo for the Government of Nunavut is located in the top left corner. It features a stylized polar bear in a circle, with the word 'Nunavut' in a bold, sans-serif font below it. To the right of the logo, the tagline 'Building Nunavut Together' is written in a smaller, italicized font.

What are the rest of us supposed to do with the empty plastic bottles that are still filling our houses?

I've heard nothing about when and where the city will collect them.
